Congress Approves Bill to End Airport Delays

The U.S. Congress easily approved legislation today ending furloughs of air traffic controllers that have delayed hundreds of flights daily, infuriated travelers and caused political headaches for lawmakers. The House approved the measure on a 361-41 vote, a day after the Senate swiftly agreed to the bill. The vote came as lawmakers prepared to leave town for a week-long spring recess, a break that would have been less pleasant if they were confronted by constituents upset over travel delays. The FAA furloughed controllers as part of the government-wide reductions. This bill would allow the FAA use of up to $253 million from airport improvement and other accounts to end furloughs for controllers through the end of the federal fiscal year, Sept. 30. In addition to restoring full staffing by controllers, the available funds can be used for other FAA operations, which include preventing the closure of small airport towers around the country. The FAA previously said it would close facilities to meet its share of the spending cuts.
