ITEM 5. OTHER INFORMATION

The Transport Workers Union ("TWU") has informed AMR's principal subsidiary, American Airlines, Inc. ("American"), that its members have ratified seven of the eight contracts on which American and the TWU reached tentative agreement in August 1995. These contracts include a one-time early retirement program which is expected to result in a substantial charge to AMR's earnings during the quarter ending December 31, 1995. This charge, which cannot be reasonably estimated at this time, is not expected to have a significant impact on the financial position or liquidity of AMR.

The TWU and American have also reached a new tentative agreement on the eighth contract covering fleet service workers. The tentative agreement has been submitted to the fleet service membership for a vote, with results expected in late October 1995. This contract also includes a one-time early retirement program which, if ratified, is expected to result in an additional charge to AMR's earnings during the quarter ending December 31, 1995. This charge cannot be reasonably estimated at this time but is not expected to have a significant impact on the financial position or liquidity of AMR.

American's contract with the Association of Professional Flight Attendants ("APFA") became amendable in December 1992. Following a lengthy negotiation and mediation process, the APFA staged a five-day strike against American in November 1993. The strike ended when both parties agreed to binding arbitration. The arbitration process began in October 1994, and the arbitrators' decision was announced on October 10, 1995. Among other things, the decision provides for (i) wage increases that will result in higher flight attendant unit labor costs and (ii) a one-time early retirement program for certain flight attendants which is expected to result in a substantial charge to AMR's earnings during the quarter ending December 31, 1995. This charge, which cannot be reasonably estimated at this time, is not expected to have a significant impact on the financial position or liquidity of AMR.
