Item 7.01. Regulation FD Disclosure.

On June 22, 2015, American Airlines Group Inc. provided the information below to its employees and the employees of its subsidiaries through inclusion in its internal Jetwire publication.

Parker sells stock

Today the Company reported that CEO Doug Parker has exercised and sold 113,000 stock appreciation rights (SARs). Doug received these SARs (similar to stock options) in April 2006, August 2008 and April 2009 when he was CEO of US Airways. These SARs expire over the next 12 months, which means they expire worthless if they are not exercised and sold.

To facilitate the exercise and sale of this equity before expiration, Doug entered into a 10b5-1 plan May 20, 2015 that lays out a specific date each month for the next year whereby Doug will exercise and sell these SARs. The award prices range from $3.10 to $38.44 per share, which is the price Doug will pay to exercise the SARs, which will then be sold in the open market. How much these SARs are ultimately worth will depend on the share price of AAL stock at the time the shares are sold.

Doug has a large holding in AAL that has been publicly disclosed and remains extremely positive about the future of American. To learn about what a 10b5-1 plan is, the other two times Doug has sold stock, and additional details, Jetnet has more.

Limitation on Incorporation by Reference
